A review of lawyers for our honorand hardly needs justification, nor is the choice of country inappropriate. Needless to say persons with some pretence to professional attainments must have appeared in the courts of law of Graeco-Roman Palestine in all periods. Nevertheless, by the chances of survival of our sources it is only from Late Antiquity that we have explicit evidence of people defined as lawyers.¹

An appraisal of members of the profession in Late Antique Palestine also presents a good opportunity to consider one aspect of higher education in this country. Lawyers appearing in court and speaking there had to be trained speakers, and accordingly they went through the usual stages of Greek education, including study with a grammaticus, and later a rhetor or sophist: not only the numerous pupils of the famous rhetors Aeneas of Gaza² and Procopius of Gaza,³ but also their friends and colleagues who appear in their correspondences provide excellent examples for this. The next stage was study in a School of Law, and it so happens that the famous School of Berytus (Beirut)\(^4\) was easily accessible, though some people went as far as Constantinople to study. However, one did not have to go even so far, since a School of Law operated also in this country. Yet, the only safe fact concerning a School of Law in Caesarea is Justinian’s prohibition of 533 of teaching there:

\ldots\text{quia audivimus etiam in Alexandrina splendidissima civitate et in Caesariensium et in aliis quosdam imperitos homines devagare et doctrinam discipulis adulterinam tradere: quos sub hac interminatone ab hoc conamine repellimus, ut, si ausi fuerint in posterum hoc perpetrare et extra urbes regias et Berytensium metropolim hoc facere, denarum librarum auri poena plecantur et reiciantur ab ea civitate, in qua non leges docent, sed in leges committunt.}^5

I shall not elaborate on the School of Caesarea,\(^6\) nor on its possible influence on the legal studies of the Rabbis there,\(^7\) but a most interesting observation follows from the prosopographical list below: though we know of a number of people attested to have studied in Beirut, and some who went on to study or practice in Constantinople, not one is known to have studied in Caesarea. I find it difficult to attribute this exclusively to the chances of survival: perhaps Justinian’s homines imperiti and doctrina adulterina were not entirely unwarranted. Nevertheless, one cannot dismiss the possibility that we are aware only of the people at the top of their profession, not of those who studied at inferior institutions.

Latin was an important aspect of the study of law, which consisted mainly in the study of legal texts in that language – little wonder that the Antiochean rhetor Libanius was worried about losing pupils to this competition.\(^8\) Not a few intellectuals in Palestine must have been bilingual, not necessarily limiting themselves to legal texts, so that it is hardly surprising that Caesarea was home, among others, to the Latin historian Eutropius and to the grammarian Priscian.\(^9\)

In Late Antiquity lawyers were as a rule referred to as scholastikoi\(^10\) and in the following prosopography I will list them first (abbreviated as sch.), and then I shall proceed and list those for whom legal studies or legal activities are credibly attested. The annotation will be kept to the bare minimum.

Though one can never be too careful with figures and statistics in Antiquity, it seems that the number of lawyers attested in Palestine is rather high and their spread across the country may approach something that is not too far from representing the situation in the various cities. But there is much more to this list than an enumeration of lawyers. One must imagine their teachers, fellow students, the teachers of Latin, and last but not least, the public in the courts of law, part of which at any rate would be able to understand the Greek speeches and even appreciate the finer points of language, style and argument. Thus an enumeration of the known lawyers in Late Antique Palestine reveals for us at least one aspect of classical civilisation there.

I. SCHOLASTIKOI

He dedicated himself to religion and charity. Dam. frg. 186 = Suda A 2763; PLRE II, no. 3; SZABAT 2007, no. 22 (she conjectures that he may have entertained Damascius and Isidorus in Gaza).

Epiphanius
Pupil of Procopius of Gaza, lawyer and eventually governor of an unidentified province. PLRE II, no. 4; RE VI, col. 196, no. 9.

The Suda mentions his τέχνη γραμματική and ὀνοματικὴ ὀρθογραφία (perhaps one work); was perhaps also the author of a περὶ διαλέκτων. Seeck 1906, 131; Kaster 1988, no. 55; PLRE I, no. 3; RE VI, col. 885; Sivan 2008, 80-81.

APPENDIX: JEWS AND SAMARITANS

Elasius
Or Gelasius, known from a Greek inscription in the synagogue of Diocaesarea (Sepphoris); he was sch., comes and ἡμπέρτατος (vir clarissimus). It is not clear whether he was the donor or the official in whose time the donation was made, and accordingly it cannot be decided whether he was a Jew or not. The synagogue is 5th c.; if Elasius was Jewish the inscription must be pre-438, when Jews were not allowed such distinctions — perhaps strengthening the preference for a non-Jewish official.
PLRE II, s.v.; CIJ no. 991; Roth Gerson 1987, 104-105, no. 24.

Arsenius
Arsenius and his two sons, Sallustius and Silvanus, all three scholastikoi, are mentioned in an inscription at Scythopolis from 500/1 or 515/6, see DiSegni 1999, 625-642 at 638-640. They (viz., Arsenius and Silvanus, and implicitly Sallustius) are known as Samaritans, though not as scholastikoi, from Cyril of Scythopolis, Vita Sabae 61, 71.
